REFLECTIONS AT PLYMOUTH

Roy E. McFee

57

It was a sunny September afternoon when we approached with fitting reverence this most hallowed of American shrines. We found the little town of Plymouth nestling still where New England civilization began in a bleak December.

At Plymouth all paths lead to the rock itself. It lies at the water's edge, as formerly, but is inclosed now by columns and railing, with a canopy overhead. Whether or not this rock actually knew the youthful footsteps of Pilgrim men and women, it surely marks the vicinity where they first stood on soil of the New World. Just behind it rises Cole's Hill with its Sarcophagus, the resting place of the first to perish, while the graves of others are on the ridge above. Leyden Street, the first road in New England, still follows its original route.

Over these waves came the Pilgrims in their intrepid Mayflower. They were one hundred three person of ability and spirit, of whom forty-four were to die in the following four months. They little thought in those grim days that remote generations would do them honor. At the great roll call of the Pilgrim descendants, a proud host will answer, including seven American Presidents.

We visited Pilgrim Hall with its early relics. There one sees the Damascus sword of Miles Standish and the family Bible of Governor Bradford. Also seen is the cradle of Peregrine White. There too is a portrait of Edward Winslow, said to be the only existing likeness of any Mayflower passenger.

Other significant landmarks dot the town of Plymouth. Among these is the Statue of the Pilgrim Maiden in Brewster Gardens, the site of the original gardens of the Pilgrims. And towering over Plymouth is the National Monument to the Forefathers, rising from the summit to a height of eighty feet.

Cole's Hill looks over shore and water. Up the coast one sees the Miles Standish Monument showing above the tree tops. A mounted telescope, for a fee, allows a close view of this monument to the great Captain. Or the telescope may be pointed out to sea, where ships move along the horizon. Somewhere out there, in that early day, the Mayflower halted while the Compact was signed.

Every American is doubtlessly pleased to find also on Cole's Hill an imposing statue in bronze by the master hand of Dallin. It is the commanding figure of an Indian, gazing with fixed eye over Plymouth Rock and out across the Atlantic. The inscription reads: "To the Memory of Massasoit, Grand Sachem of the Wampanoags, the Protector and Preserver of the Pilgrims."

Last of all, in the cemetery on the ridge, we walked among the gravestones of Pilgrim families. There lies the scholarly William Bradford, Governor of Plymouth for more than thirty years. From his hilltop he has kept watch for three centuries over the settlement he loved, while his descendants and those of the other Pilgrims have held high the torch of liberty in the New World.

At nightfall we turned away. Gently the shadows were dimming historic landmarks and ancient sites. Under the stars there gleamed only the ocean highway which the valiant Pilgrims never took, back to their native land.

"SOME NOTABLE FAMILIES OF DETROIT" was the subject of the paper read before the Detroit Society for Genealogical Research at the December meeting by Mr. M. Woolsey Campau, a descendant of Detroit's earliest citizens. Mr. Campau traced his lineage in a direct line back to Antoine de Bourbon, King of Navarre. On his family tree are branches showing the grafting of nationalities other than the French, for his mother was Mary Livingstone Woolsey, who combined the blood of colonial Connecticut and New York with the New Amsterdam Dutch, while the pure French of the Campaus was joined with the Scotch when his grandfather, Barnabas Campau, married Archange Mac Dougall, daughter of a British army officer. With the wit of his Gallic ancestry, and the shrewdness and practicality of his Anglo-Saxon heritage, Mr. Campau told of his early recollections and gave intimate word pictures of various relatives. His discourse was illustrated by a priceless exhibit of early documents, copies of family portraits, charts, maps, sketches, re-record books, and diaries of an early day. With no apology, he suppresses his first name, though he is the fifth in a direct line of notable ancestors to bear it, and any number of Woolsey cousins answer to the name Melancthon.

THOSE WHO SEEK BRITISH ANCESTORS gained definite information on how and where to direct their efforts when Norman H. Burfitt, Labor Attache of the British Consulate General in Detroit, spoke before our Society at its first meeting of the New Year. Taking as his subject "Genealogy in Britain," Mr. Burfitt traced the development of the British system of collecting and preserving vital records from the days of the Conquest until now. In 1085, William the Conqueror ordered a survey of all dwellers in England outside of London, with lists of the possessions of each. The results of this census were recorded in what was known as the Domesday Book. From that time on no effort was made to gather statistics of this nature till Cromwell, 500 years later, ordered the appointment of a Registrar General. The voluntary work of parish priests during that time and since provide records of great value where they have escaped fire and other destructive agents. Since 1801 there has been a complete census conducted every ten years, with the exception of 1941. "In 1836," said the speaker, "Parliament passed a law making compulsory the registration of births, marriages, and deaths; the same law made official the appointment of a Registrar General. ---- There is a vast network of registration offices throughout the country" and Somerset House in London is the final repository of all this data. For a dollar one can obtain a copy of any certificate of marriage which occurred later than 1836. The offices of the Society of Genealogists, Chancery House, Malet Place, London, W. C. 1., contain a card index of about three million cards, also a Marriage Index, 1538-1837, containing items regarding over six million marriages, as well as transcriptions of parish registers and similar sources of facts and figures. Here a one day search in behalf of an inquirer, by a member, will cost eight dollars and the results will be accompanied by advice as to prospects for the success for further search.

COMPARATIVE FREQUENCY OF CHRISTIAN NAMES
Maurice W. Fox

Every searcher has been faced with the problem of the identity of two or more persons having the same name. Instantly, the thought occurs "How common is this name?" It is apparent that if we find two John Scotts in Massachusetts, they are probably different men. But if we find two Phinehas Mixters, it is likely that these two are either identical or closely related.

As an aid in solving this problem, I took 1000 male names from the 1790 census. I used the first four names on each page of the Massachusetts census and on some pages of the Connecticut census, with the following result:

Aaron	10	Branch	1	Ezekiel	6	Jermiah	1	Obed	1

An inspection of this list shows nearly all names are Biblical and indicate an English parentage. The American melting pot of 1790 had comparatively few ingredients. We find no Hans, no Giovanni, no Jacques. The comparative frequency of the names found is indicated in the table which follows:

John	106	Daniel	28	1 @ 15 - 15	7 @ 6 - 42
Samuel	56	Jonathan	28	3 @ 14 - 42	7 @ 5 - 35
William	47	David	26	2 @ 11 - 22	10 @ 4 - 40

Let us investigate the question of the identity of Beriah Brown of Massachusetts with Beriah Brown of Rhode Island. Beriah was a very rare name in 1790, and remains so today. The average telephone book discloses no Beriah Brown, no Beriah Miller, no Beriah Smith.

In a book which lists and defines 4000 masculine Christian names, Beriah is not mentioned. Nor does this name appear in our list of 1000. One Beriah Brown is mentioned in "Early Settlers of Howley, Mass." page 27, which says he married Sarah Harris, January 6, 1573-4.

One Beriah Brown is mentioned in Austin's "General Dictionary of Rhode Island," page 151, which says he married Abigail Phenix about 1685. He is doubtless the same as mentioned in "History of Washington and Kent Counties" (Rhode Island) by Cole, which says on page 379: "Beriah Brown was also a resident as early as 1687."

I find nothing to contradict the theory that the two Beriah Browns are identical, and that his first wife died in Massachusetts, and later he removed to Rhode Island and married Abigail Phenix.

In support of our theory we may consider not only the frequency of the name Beriah, but the frequency of the surname Brown. In the sixteen states for which we have a 1790 census, there were 807,094 free white males listed of a total population of 3,893,635. Of the 807,094 free white males, about six tenths of one percent were Browns or Brownes.

The population of the United States, in 1685, when the Rhode Island Beriah Brown married Abigail Phenix, was about 214,000 and if 0.6% were Browns, there were only 1284 Browns.

The probability of there being two adult male Beriah Browns in the United States in 1685 is therefore remote. We, of course, have only circumstantial evidence and no absolute proof.

A SHIER (SCHEIER, SCHEUER) FAMILY RECORD,

Compiled by

Mrs. Florence (Shier) Roberts

The earliest known ancestors of the Shier family lived in an independent German Principality called the Palatinate, consisting of four or five provinces lying on both sides of the Rhine river, just north of Switzerland. The inhabitants were called Palatines. Their country ceased to exist as an independent Principality as a result of the Napoleonic wars.

Shier is the Anglicized spelling of the name, which, in the Palatinate was pronounced the same as its Anglicized form, but was spelled Scheier. In Germany, today, the name would be pronounced as Seer, but would be spelled Scheier or Scheuer. It was not until several generations after the family left the Palatinate that the English spelling was adopted. In this record the Anglicized spelling will be used.

The armies of Louise XIV of France frequently ravaged the Palatinate, with heartless and astonishing cruelty, between 1688 and 1707. As a result, many Palatines left their country for quieter parts of Germany and Holland. But in 1709 a great exodus of Palatines took place. During the summer of that year, 13,000 of them, in scattered groups and often by stealth, managed to reach England, hoping that they would soon be sent to America. Owing to delays, 5,500 of them became dispersed through Great Britain. In this way, one Shier family located in Aberdeenshire, Scotland. Two of them were medical doctors in Demerara; one emigrated to New York and then to Whitby, Ontario, where he was a land surveyor.

Following the conquest of Ireland, by William III, of England, many English landlords in the south of Ireland were in sore need of tenants. At their request, the British government sent 3,500 Palatines, who were then living under the bounty of Queen Anne, in London, into the south of Ireland. Among these there was one family of Shiers, and it was settled at Court Mattress in Limerick County. The Head of this family was Adam Shier; with him were his four sons: Henry, Charles, Adam and Nicholas. The original Limerick Adam Shier died in 1758, according to the English Church records at Rathkeale, near Court Mattress. Some of these Shiers descendants still live in County Limerick.

There were, no doubt, some emigrants from among the Palatines in County Limerick previous to 1760, but in that year a very considerable number came to New York State. Among these were Philip Embury and Barbara Heck, founders of the Methodist Church in America. It is probable that the compiler's great great grandfather was among them, since he held a position in the New York Customs when the American Revolution started. Quite a number of Palatines, among them Barbara Heck, lived in the Camden Valley, north of New York City, when the Revolution broke. Being grateful to Britain for past kindnesses to their ancestors in 1709, they left the States and went to Canada. Henry (Henry 2, Adam 1) Shier, the compiler's great great grandfather, who held a post in the New York Customs until the start of the Revolution, was probably among those escaping to Canada. In Canada, these emigrants are grouped as "United Empire Loyalists."

In 1829, Charles Shier, second son of County Limerick's Adam, settled in Canada. Charles was the grandfather of Dr. Walter C. Shier, of Uxbridge, Ont., who furnished much of the early history in this record. Shiers have settled in South Africa, Yokohama, Illinois, Michigan, California, and in many parts of Canada, remote from Uxbridge. All these families are descended from the first Limerick Adam Shier of 1709. In the township of Brock, a few miles from Uxbridge, nine different Shiers settled between 1823 and 1850. All came from Limerick. The aforementioned Charles Shier was one of them. These nine families included descendants from each of the four sons of the original Adam of County Limerick. From Brock many descendants of the nine families have moved to locations in many parts of Canada and the United States. Early Limerick and Brock families of Shiers were prolific, so there are many of Adam Shier's descendants living in Canada and the United States today.

The last 3,000 of the original 13,000, who left the Palatinate, in 1709, were sent to New York, in 1710, from England, to make tar, pitch and other naval stores from pines on the banks of the Hudson, Mohawk and Schoharie rivers. There is no record of Shiers among existing records of this immigration.

Rev. William Crook's "Ireland and the Centenary of American Methodism" presents "a tolerably complete list of the names of those families who settled on Lord Southwell's estate." This list includes the name Shier. The estate referred to was near Rathskeale, County Limerick. Land was leased to the emigrants who were settled in Ireland in 1709. About 1760, many of these emigrants went to America, probably because too high rentals were demanded after their first leases expired.

In July, 1934, Walter Knittle, in his "Early Palatine Emigration," listed among Palatine families in County Limerick, Ireland, the following Shiers:

ADARE:	ASKELON:	BALLISTEEN:
Pembroke Shier	Mrs. Alice Cross, nee Shier	Henry Shier
Jethro Shier, Sr.
Jethro Shier, Jr.	Between ASKEATON AND FAYNES:	BALLIGRIANE:

Oct. 31, 1855, on farm owned by her son George Shier, near Ypsilanti, Mich. May be buried in Udell cemetery. Excerpts from letters, written by Eliza Shier, daughter of Charles, to her nephew in 1894, reveal many facets of the life and times of her grandparents, Henry Shier and Barbary Ann Krasukopf: "Grandmother Shier's maiden name was Krasukopf or Kroskopf. Her father owned an Inn and a large garden planted to vegetables, on what is now known as the Bowery in New York City Grandmother was thirteen years old at the time the British bombarded New York City. Her father locked Grandmother and her mother in the cellar to keep them from harm. Grandmother was very angry; she wanted to see the fight Her first name was Barbary Ann. Her father forced her to marry a British officer when she was fourteen. This man's name was Harvoy. When Barbara Ann was nineteen years old she had four children and was a widow. When she was an old lady, she liked to tell her grandchildren how she gave General George Washington a drink of water, when he stopped with members of his staff in front of her father's Inn, after the British left New York City ... Grandfather Shier was no businessman. He loved his violin, his books and his flowers. He was educated for Medicine and the Episcopal ministry. His father insisted that he marry a lady the father selected and enter the Episcopal ministry. On the refusal to do either, the son was disinherited ... married the girl of his choice, Barbary Ann, who permitted him to do just what he loved to do. She looked after the family, took all material matters into her capable hands and spent her life thanking God that she had been allowed to have a gentleman for a husband"

(Note: The Family Bible used by Barbary Ann and her husband, Henry "Harry" Shier, for their family records, was the same one used by Capt. Harvoy to record his marriage to Barbary Ann and the records of the Harvoy children. The Bible was left to Watson Snyder II, great grandson of Barbara Ann and Henry Shier. In a fire in a fireproof warehouse, in Newark, N. J., the Bible was destroyed, in 1909.)

32 Elizabeth Carus m. Charles Loring Elliott, noted portrait painter. They were the parents of one child, a son. Elizabeth was known as "Cousin Lizzie."

George K. Shier (Henry 4, Henry 3, Henry 2, Adam 1) b. Apr. 9, 1803, Brooklyn, N.Y.;

d. Apr. 17, 1875, Holland Twp., Dickenson Co., Kans.; m. abt. 1828, Ann Tice, b. 1812, N. J.; d. June 14, 1887, Detroit, Mich.; buried Woodmere Cemetery, Detroit.

Ann was the dau. of Peter and Ann Van Blarcom (or Blarcom). George K. was a millwright. In the early days of Michigan, he was a singing teacher. He was Class Leader in the Methodist Episcopal church. A man who loved to sing, have a good time with his friends and let his children do the work on the farm he knew nothing about operating. His wife was a remarkable woman, endeared to all. She was a descendant of Anneke Jans and an interested party in the litigations over the "Trinity Church Property," in New York City. Anneke was among the Dutch colonists of New Netherlands, who came with her first husband, Roeloff Jans (or Jansen) to New Amsterdam. Her second husband was the Huguenot, Rev. Evarardus Bogardus. Some of the heirs of Anneke sold the property, about sixty acres, to Governor Lovelace. Later the property was confiscated and granted to Trinity Church Corporation. Certain descendants of the non-participating heirs brought suit against the Trinity corporation, among them George Shier, who for years contributed to the expense of the litigations, in his wife's interest.

SOME EWELL FAMILY LINES
Dr. Willard Monfort

Through a search of the records of Old Church, Ewell, England, which are kept in the tower dating back to 1570, and the search instituted among the records of St. Peter's Church at Sandwich, England, by Joseph H. Ewell, it has been made certain that Kent and Surrey counties were the original home of the Ewell family. In the St. Peter's Registry are shown the children of John Ewell; Joshua, baptized 1611, Zecheus, 1614, John 1617 and Sarah, 1617. Several leaves of the register are missing - those which might have recorded the birth of Henry Ewell about 1615.

I. John Ewell.

II. Henry was the first of the Ewell family to come to America. He arrived in the ship "Hercules" which sailed from Sandwich, England for America. March 1634-5. He went to Scituate, Mass., a town composed mostly of "Men from Kent." Later he was in Barnstable and then back in Scituate.

On Nov. 23, 1638 he married Sarah, daughter of Anthony Annable and wife Jane. Sarah, born 1622 came with her parents to Plymouth in 1623 on the Ship Anne and before 1630 settled in Scituate and then in Barnstable. Henry died in 1687 and Sarah later. Each left a will.

Henry was a soldier of the Pequot War. In Scituate, during King Philip's War, on April 19, 1676, their home was burned by the Indians. Sarah saw the Indians coming over the hill and being excited, she left her grandchild in the crib and ran to the fort. Then she ran back by another way and rescued the child. The Indians had left the house, but a few hours later they returned and burned the home. It was during this war that more than fifty towns of the ninety in New England, were wholly or mostly burned, more than a thousand white men were slain and an uncounted number of women and children perished.

On Henry Ewell's homestead in Scituate, was a well, that became the subject of Samuel Woodworth's poem, "The Old Oaken Bucket." Samuel Woodworth was a descendant of the babe left asleep in the crib as mentioned above.

Oct. 28, 1737, daughter of Solomon, son of Joshua, son of Joseph, son of Clement. Mother of all his children, she d. Feb. 3, 1801 in Chesterfield, Mass. John lived on the family homestead until sometime before 1775 when he moved to Chesterfield, Mass. Here he lost his arm in 1779 and married his second wife after Deborah's death. In 1825, they moved to Middlebury, N. Y. to live with his son James. He died there. His wife died in Chesterfield in 1833.

During the War of 1812, two British men-of-war came into the unprotected harbor of Scituate and were about to carry away two ship loads of flour that were lying there and plunder the town. The inhabitants fled, after trying to conceal their property or get it to a place of safety. Two young girls, Rebecca and Abigail Bates were tending the nearby light house. After warning the inhabitants of the town, they went back to the lighthouse, got a fife and drum which they knew how to play. Going over behind a sand ridge that concealed them from view, they marched toward the town playing the fife and drum for dear life. The British forces, thinking that a body of soldiers was coming from Boston, hastened to their ships and sailed away. The episode was called the "Victorious Army of Two." Undoubtedly these girls were of the family of Deborah Bates, as was Hon. John L. Bates, former Governor of Massachusetts. He was a soldier of the Revolution.

CORRECTIONS AND ADDITION TO PUBLISHED GENEALOGICAL WORKS

"THE DETROIT SOCIETY FOR GENEALOGICAL RESEARCH MAGAZINE," Vol. XII, No. 1, page 9. "A Couchman Family Record." The wife of Benjamin Couchman, b. 1793, was Mary Anner Lawrence and it was not her but the mother of Benjamin who was believed to have been either Indian or of Indian extraction. The couple raised rather than adopted the two Claycomb boys to whom the old farm was eventually left. In the third generation (line 3) Alice, wife of Henry Benjamin Couchman, died 1931 not 1831. Add to the children of Ira Clemert Couchman and Tuce Smith, (p. 10) a third child, Jessie. Also on p. 11, fourth generation, Guilford Henry Couchman was born at rather than near Sumner, Ill. Correction submitted by Mrs. F. A. Tiedgen.

NOTES OF THE SOCIETY

We sadly report that our member, Harry Crockett Hutchins of Scarsdale, N. Y., died September 2, 1948. . . Granddaughter of our Mrs. Chadman, Drucilla Jane Ross, married September 10, 1948 in Midland, Mich., James Willard Hayden. The bride looked lovely in her wedding dress but probably no more lovely than did her grandmother in the same dress June 27, 1901. . . Mr. Martin is again a grandfather. Eugenia Mary Foy was born November 27, 1948 to parents Harriet and Eugene Foy. A daughter was born two days before at the same hospital in Ann Arbor to member Russell Bidlack. All these young parents are students at Michigan U. Mr. Bidlack is out for a Ph.D. in Library Science. . . Mr. Blount met our member, Mrs. Nelson Tunnicliff in New York this summer where she helped smooth his path in the Albany Library. . . Miss Leona Weir, another New Yorker was in Detroit and Pontiac last summer and went on from here to Washington to work in the Congressional Library. . . Our Mrs. Chase, in assembling dramatic material for her radio classes became so interested in Huck Finn and Tom Sawyer and their creator that she spent her summer vacation visiting Mark Twain historical spots. She visited fifteen different localities, spent a day with Clara Clemens in Los Angeles and met the author of a book on Mark Twain in Nevada. Well-primed, she spoke before the National Mark Twain Society on November 10 in New York. . . We are sorry to report two knock-outs: (1) Mr. Francis Robinson by the impact of his car with a utility pole, (2) Miss Lowell by her old debbil, high blood pressure. Both are recovering. . . Although only down to the letter N in the index, Miss Hathaway inadvertently slipped down a few notches over Xmas. Put in the hospital by Pneumonia, it took ten days of Penicillin to Pull her out.

Genealogy must run in their blood. Mr. L. Worrick McFee, brother to our Roy, is now President of the National Genealogical Society in Washington. . . A recent manuscript gift, "Descendants of Robert & Betsey McGee, who came to Michigan from Ontario Co., N. Y. about 1830" was contributed by Mrs. A. C. Williams. . . Another case of "Go West." Dr. Mudd says there are copies of many English Parish Records in the Los Angeles Library and a search of them may be had. . . Any one interested in Tennessee genealogy? See the genealogical column in the Friday Nashville Banner. The society has a six months take-a-look subscription. . . Librarians are human too. In a primer recently given to Burton, we note many pencil marks where there shouldn't be any. Whose primer? Why the one that belonged to little Gracie Krum, who grew up to be a librarian and warn us searchers not to mark in the books. . . Mr. Robinson got the headline, but Mrs. Stones gave the speech before Piety Hill DAR on January 11. . . We didn't know of Mr. McFee's speech before the Dearborn chapter DAR in November until the delight of the ladies came seeping back. . . Don't say we didn't warn you! The people of Washtenaw Co. Mich. are on the verge of remodelling or tearing down their county courthouse and building new. The older county records may be stored and inaccessible for a long time. . . So sorry that our parliamentarian, Mrs. Butler, has been kept from the meetings by eye-trouble. . . The California weather on the day of the January meeting brought the Austins from Ypsilanti, Mrs. Osborn and party from Ann Arbor, Dr. Mudd from Saginaw. But where, oh where is Mr. Moore gone? . . Says our Mrs. Seth, known to us only by magazine, "Time and again I have been forced to forego examination of very attractive material because limited time prevented a page-by-page search, and there was no index." Thanks Mrs. Seth for your offer to help with ours. . . Out-of-town friends often, write, laying extensive genealogical problems in the lap of the Society. The Society has no personnel or committee that can do such work. We can refer you to a competent genealogist or, if you are a member, we will publish a query or queries on specific points.
